In our Public Relations practice, we believe that PR is both an art and a science. We believe in basing our PR arguments and strategies on scientifically proven data, data that is attained through research. As our slogan states, we give our clients Researched Intelligence. It is in this line that we have a research department specializing in brand/communication related research projects.

We have, over the years, conducted comprehensive brand/communication surveys that significantly enhanced the clients' strategic communication efforts. Such surveys include; baseline survey, communication needs assessment, brand audit and customer satisfaction survey.

We tailor these surveys to assess the effectiveness of the clients' existing communication channels, messaging, and stakeholder engagement strategies. As part of this exercise, we gather qualitative and quantitative data from the client's key stakeholders to gain insights into their perceptions, expectations, and information needs. This process involves the use of structured interviews, focus group discussions, and digital surveys to ensure a diverse and representative dataset.

The findings of the surveys provide a clear understanding of the strengths and gaps within the client's communication framework. Leveraging these insights, Avant develops actionable recommendations to improve messaging, streamline communication processes, and enhance stakeholder engagement.

These impactful surveys not only addressed immediate communication challenges but also laid the foundation for a robust, evidence-based communication strategies that aligned with the clients' objectives and stakeholder expectations.
